

The Three Roads

Eighteen months from today your client stands on one of three roads: green (act), grey (drift), red (erode). You cannot guarantee the outcome. You can guarantee the pathway.

1 Today, without judgement

THE DOT

Describe today in plain facts

Numbers where possible: hours, revenue, leads, energy. There is nothing wrong with today.

Today, compressed to five words or fewer

The peg in the sand: rule a line on the past

Your version of: 'Everything before today doesn't matter anymore, and it wasn't entirely your fault.' Shame looks backward; this model needs them looking forward.

2 The green road: act

THE PATHWAY

What is true at 6 months on the green road?

What is true at 12 months?

What is true at 18 months?

The green road, compressed to five words or fewer

3 The grey road: drift

THE HONEST MIDDLE

Same effort, same habits: where does the grey road lead in 18 months?

Not a disaster. Today repeated 540 times, with more fatigue. It feels free; it is the most expensive road.

The grey road, compressed to five words or fewer

4

The red road: erode

WHAT DECAYS

What actively gets worse if nothing changes?

Which client, skill or position quietly erodes? Who is learning faster? Factual, not frightening.

The red road, compressed to five words or fewer

5

The gap and the guarantee

THE CLOSE

The gap sentence (one line about the 18-month gap)

The pathway promise: what CAN you guarantee?

The steps, the support, the checkpoints. Written the way you speak.

The first step on the green road, this week

Small and concrete. The model creates the decision; this field catches it.
